Fred,

For muskies in the east you might try Blue Marsh Lake and Lake Nockamixon. The Delaware and Schuylkill rivers also received stockings of tiger muskies and I believe New Jersey may have put purebred fingerlings in the DE River. I think some sections of the Lehigh River may also have muskies. The PFBC has curtailed musky stockings in recent years so you might want to check their website for up to date info on muskies. As far as I'm aware, there is no natural reproduction of muskies in the eastern part of the state (they do reproduce in the western part of the state).

I have had some good luck with pike in Lake Marburg in SW York Co. The pike are numerous in this lake and run large but they are tough to catch in the summer as they hold in deep water. In March/April however they can be caught in shallow weedy bays. Good luck.
