Cool, thanks. I'm actually staying at the state owned cottages there, located between the coast guard station and the marina on the north side. They look pretty nice. Looks like there's a place where sand meets rock, on the bay side, pretty much out the door.

I suppose cleated Simms shoes wouldn't cut it for the rock, you need true spikes? And, for that matter, is salt a good idea on wading boots?

As I said, it's mostly a family trip. For the beach trips, I'll probably throw the surf rod out with a mullet rig, set it in the sand spike, and play in the sand with Andrew. He usually takes a 2 hr afternoon nap, perhaps longer with the beach wearing him out. That's probably my inlet fishing time. Maybe can sneak out for an evening after dark if he goes to bed early and the wife is worn out too.

I wouldn't mind getting a keeper flounder or two.
