Not to be a grump, but I would be absolutely and completely opposed to any initiative to convert the Allegheny below Kinzua in this way.

To the point where I would probably contribute financially to any viable group opposed to the change or even perhaps sign up to assert legal standing in any action aimed at stopping any such change from taking place.

The river is already a seasonal high quality trout fishery all the way down to Oleopolis. I don't think any additional changes are either wise or warranted.

If we want to do something with the dam that would be good for the river, we should take it out and return to the river to its historic flow and thermal regimes.

So, I guess I'm a grump.....:)

Happily, no action of this sort has been proposed for the Allegheny by the Commission. And I think that's a good thing.
