

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : An alternative to hydro fracking?

Re: An alternative to hydro fracking?

Author: : bikerfish

Date: : 2012/8/15 6:02:55

URL:

Tom, exactly! these companies may have stakes in the nat gas business, but their investment and income from oil is so HUGE that they are NOT going to abandon that anytime soon. I laughed when Romney said we would be energy dependant within years if we elected him. No way, those companies are NOT going to drop their stake in the oil that they have invested so heavily in and make billions and billions of dollars from. Only way this country will be energy dependant is if people stop being so wasteful with that energy, stop buying suvs that get 8 miles per gallon, quit building and living in 5000 sq ft houses that are wasteful to heat and cool,quit using that suv to DRIVE the kids to the F'n bus stop everyday, which is at the end of the F'n driveway(that one really gets to me, lazy ass's, no wonder we're so fat) when demand for oil drops, only then will these companies start investing more in the alternatives. energy independence? yeah right, none of us will ever see it.