

---

Subject: : Warm Water & Salt Water Fly-Fishing

Topic: : Delaware coast

Re: Delaware coast

Author: : TimMurphy

Date: : 2012/8/15 6:22:08

URL:

Dear Pcray,

The picture you posted shows something different from what I saw last summer, and the summers before.

You should still have a bit of a hole there where the wall joins the bulkhead so when the tide is changing and the current is running it would definitely be worth your while to explore that area.

Yes, you can no longer go right to the sand at the water's edge but the reality is that it will just like fishing anywhere else on the North jetty in that you will be 3 to 6 feet from the water's surface depending on the tides.

Edited to add - If you are going to be fly fishing and expecting bluefish it will be worth your while to buy a spool of that American Fishing Wire knotable coated wire leader material to prevent bite-offs. You can also use 25 to 30 pound mono leader material as a bite guard.

Regards,

Tim Murphy 😊