I know fish can clear some extraordinary hurdles to move upstream (or down) but I don't think there's many fish at all below the dam that ever successfully move upstream past that specific dam. Not even in most high water events.

In the name of fish movement it would be great if the PFBC would indeed release the money for the approved grant the LRSA has for the "Alaska fish ladder." I know fish ladders don't always work as well as we hoped but that's never stopped the PFBC & other agencies from dumping money into them on the lower Lehigh, right?
