Again, I asked about the Loyalhanna's water level, not whether people were catching fish, or to show me pictures of fish.

Here was my question:

anyone fish the project on the Loyalhanna lately? I'm going to give it a whirl on Sat. I only live about 20-25min from it, just been fishing everywhere else instead. I know it was low earlier in the fall, but we've got a fair amount of rain lately.

I didn't post a report because I didn't go. Shame on me. Maybe if I went I wouldn't have posted how well I did anyway.

Regardless, there is a difference between reporting that you had a good time, and selling the stream. Some of these reports resemble a sales pitch for a private fishing club more than a report to help people catch fish.

You're obviously trying to pin me as a hypocrite for asking about water levels and then condemning someone for posting a report. I see two different things when I look at my question last year and this post. Asking if a stream is fishable in terms of water level and flat out "selling" the stream seem very different to me.
