PennDot county maps are pretty good. Some of the newer ones that are in color are very nice. They aren't as detailed as topo maps, but are pretty good, and at a scale of 1 inch to a mile. They do include streams and gamelands etc.

Even with the old black and white maps, you can take a blue highlighter and trace over the streams you are interested in, so they are easy to see.

You order these from PennDot directly. They are called "Type 10" maps. Who knows where that name comes from, but that's the kind you want.

The DeLorme of course.

State forest maps are great, but I don't there are many, or any in the counties you are talking about.

I think Topozone.com is great for very detailed maps. They have all the USGS topographic maps online. You can search by stream name or town name.
