This past weekend, the grannoms didn't show on Oil Creek. The weather had the water into the high 50s. I busted out the new Helios 8 wt to blow the stink off of it.

I tied into a decent number of pre-spawners from 10 to about 14 inches. They fought great. It didn't matter much what I threw at them. In the flatter water, it helped if I had a sculpin-ish fly on. The FeatherCraft Woolhead sculpin with a cone head and a Gammy sz. 1 jig hook did well. Man, I LOVE that tie!

Really, in my 12 years of tying flies, you kiss a lot of toads. Some are a pain, some just don't work well, some don't hook well. I've fell into a bunch of flies that look good, fish well, cast well, hook well, and last for more than a couple of fish.
