Two-tier fisheries. Some lakes have them. And I'd venture to guess most of the reservoirs in this state that are big enough to sustain coldwater releases to support a trout fishery have them as well. I am sure this issue will rear its head as the PFBC pursues its tailwater policy. And I would not be surprised to see it as a reason to not make any changes to release management. It has come up on one reservoir here in eastern PA. I'd imagine though that with a selective withdrawl capability the issue of depleting the lower tier can be avoided. To me though to use it as an excuse is somewhat of a red-herring.
