

Subject: : Warm Water & Salt Water Fly-Fishing

Topic: : Bluegill water

Re: Bluegill water

Author: : TimMurphy

Date: : 2012/8/18 18:07:19

URL:

Dear Coughlin,

You might want to try the back end of Marsh Creek or Chambers Lake. I never fished Chambers since it is newer but I used to do pretty well on the back end of Marsh Creek when I was younger and fished more around Philadelphia.

The better bluegill fishing always seemed to be in private ponds and I imagine that is still the case? Maybe you can find a fishing spot by taking a ride with taking your gear along and asking a few landowners if they would allow you to fish their ponds?

I'll be honest and say I've tried that in the past with very limited success but you might be a more handsome and presentable fellow than me so your luck might be better. 😊 The ones I did gain access to almost always offered very good fishing.

You can also catch some decent redbreast sunfish, to me a sunnie is sunnie is a bluegill, in the Delaware River and the Schuylkill River. Find a stretch of uniform depth with a tree lined bank and wade out into the river and work your way upstream or downstream casting under the trees.

Regards,

Tim Murphy 😊