What you really need to know about saltwater fishing is finding the fish is much tougher than when river fishing for trout.

Hire a guide or come back with your tail between your legs.

Also even if you find some fish unless the tide/time are correct-they ain't gonna hit.

I have been wade fishing in the lagoons and have spotted schools of dozens of redfish just gliding by but they wouldn't even pay attention to the lures.

Also between you me and the clams,unless you are an experienced flyfisher ,good caster and understand saltwater coastal fishing,without a guide you would be better off with spinning gear and mirrolures.But I didn't say that on a fly fishing forum.
