Valley Creek Info?

So it looks like I will be able to squeeze in some fishing Sunday morning. I would like to try a different stream than where I usually fish(Neshaminy) but can't travel too far.

I was thinking of trying Valley Creek as I have never fished there, but I have some reservations. I know it is a limestone but I read in a separate thread that warm groundwater washes into the stream raising the temps too high to fish for trout.

I was wondering if some of you who are more familiar with the stream can give me an idea if it is worth the drive for me(about an hour). Is it too warm now? Are there other worthwhile fish(smallies) there? Any sections I should avoid/pay attention to?

I realize some may suggest the Little Lehigh instead, but I have fished it twice with you guys and wanted to try someplace new.

Thanks
