mason,

head scratcher indeed. I caught what i believe were wild bows that spring just downstream where they electroshocked, yet they reported none.

could be the bows moved to cooler, deeper waters in other parts of the river when they shocked. The shocking study was done when the water was low and a bit warm if I recall correctly. The numbers have increased quite a bit in three years though. May be an event (flood or otherwise) flushed an unusual number out of Spruce or other tribs. As you and others wrote, can't rule out plantings.
