That area of western MD is a world class trout fishing destination and always worth a visit. If the NBP is fishing poorly or blown out, there are many other wild trout streams nearby not to mention the upper Yough tailrace. I'm not sure what water levels are like right now but flows on the lower Potomac are at typical low summer levels. I've always waded the NBP when I've visited. Check the Stream Reports forum for more info. There are cutts in there although I've never caught one.
