Thanks for the info gents and realize that it is just in poor taste if someone takes you to "their spot", and/or notifies you abt their spot and then post abt it, is in poor taste. It is up to the one who took you to decide if he wants to reveal it or not.

OK, newbie question but since it is discussed in this thread .. "If a stream can't handle high pressure". Besides h2o temp which would keep me off the trout anyhow; what exactly does that mean? If the h2o temp is in the low 60's how would I know if a trout stream could handle high pressure?

publicly posting about how you nailed 30 trout in an hour on that stream probably isn't the best thing.

Don't think we have to worry abt that with me right now 😊
