Another possibility is that the homewaters, aka spring ridge, club stocked fingerlings. I have recently found fingerling rainbows downstream from another of the evil empire's properties, and if I can somehow prove that src stocked them over a population of wild brown trout, I will immediately contact our local WCO. Anyhow, this is just another possibility, and if the empire did indeed put them in the LJR, the trout there are probably large enough to eat them before they do much damage, just as they helped take care of the fingerlings the PFBC used to stock there.

Hey Rich,

I may be well off base, but I find it hard to believe the SRC/HW Club would do anything that might benefit them long term, like 3 or 4 years down the road. I just can't see them stocking pee pee trout (Mo's word), letting them disperse into the entire stream, and hope that some will return or remain in 3 or 4 years to be caught by their members.

I would think, if they thought they could get away with it, the SRC/HW Club would more likely want to put fish fences on both ends of their property and load it with fresh lunkers for their sports to have at 'em.

Just a thought.
