Well, I started tying my own leaders, thanks to this thread! I tied up Heritage Anagler's suggested Unibody leader and some of the Harvey leader formulas I found online. I will compare the the unibody to a similar harvey leader. Blood knots on the chameleon line seem huge, but I can see how this line might roll over better than tapered leader. I've only ever used cheap cortland leaders from walmart and some scientific angler leaders so I'm sure that they wont be tough to beat!

I plan to use Loon Knot Sense to coat my knots. Anyone else do this? I've used it on the connection between the line and leader (nail knot) and it works wonders...far less hang ups on the tip top of the rod.
