PCRAY,

I guess your just that good man! I have had it happen a few times even when it is tied properly so I avoid tying the dreaded nail knot and just use the loop to loop connection. I remember streamer fishing once and I had a pretty heavy leader and I got caught in a tree with the streamer. I pointed my rod at the fly and pulled trying to snap the line but my line did not snap and my nail knot failed. It stripped the cover off of my fly line.

I think I am going to try experimenting with an Albright knot. Can anybody provide an feedback as to how it stacks up against a nail knot?
