I've never caught a carp on a fly. I have been fly fishing for a long time, mostly for trout and smallmouth bass. Nevertheless, I would like to learn more about fly fishing for carp.

I see carp, when I am fishing for smallmouth on the Delaware and Lehigh Rivers, some of them are monsters. Problem is they see me way before I see them. They often bolt from the shallows leaving a trail of silt. From the old Glendon bridge over the Lehigh River, I have seen carp so huge that if possible to catch on the fly, it would convert the most dedicated dry fly trout purist for sure.

Considering the many years that I have been fly fishing, I have never heard of anyone having great success catching carp on the fly in the Delaware and Lehigh rivers.

Perhaps, opportunity is knocking.
