Well good news fellas. Word out is that there was heavy rain this weekend, and the streams are blown out, with cooler temperatures to boot. This was confirmed by my one buddy, who is a local in Erie. If logic is any indicator, this should be the first major run for the season. There is another few days of heavy rainfall forecast next week, so that should be another big run, should be a decent number in the creeks by late September, with more to come.

Already got ProCure on the way, with a few hundred flies tied, now into some experimental flies. You wouldn't believe some of the flies I come up with for steelhead, but sometimes the key is throwing something at them that they haven't seen yet.
