

Subject: : Warm Water & Salt Water Fly-Fishing

Topic: : Susky pros

Re: Susky pros

Author: : Fishidiot

Date: : 2012/9/10 18:32:12

URL:

Quote:

Kabutt wrote:

are the miles of slower water between riffles worth targeting at all?

Absolutely! These slow pools are often great places to fish poppers in the evening. In my experience, big SMBs in rivers tend to be in deeper, slower water. Sure, you'll find 'em on occasion in riffles and pocket water but, generally speaking, you find a larger class of fish in pools.

During your explorations, make note of the river structure during low, summer flows. In particular, try to find the deepest, slowest areas. Later in the fall, the fish will move into these sections and, in some cases, winter over in them. Knowing these deep holding areas will open the door to some good bassin during the colder months of the year and esp the pre-spawn (March-April).