

Subject: : Warm Water & Salt Water Fly-Fishing

Topic: : Susky pros

Re: Susky pros

Author: : Kabutt

Date: : 2012/9/11 8:32:44

URL:

Thanks to all. I'd definitely say the biggest bass I've caught have been from the slower water. There're a few spots I've found where the river narrows considerably at the end of a pool above a riffle - I've done well at these points. I must say though, I'm hesitant to float the Susky. It just seems like there's miles of slow water to paddle through, and plus it's 100 yards wide at some places. I don't know where to start!

Quote:

afishinado wrote:

A cold front came in on Saturday night and likely put the SMB off their feed. This often happens when a cold front comes through. The weather/temps will stabilize and the good fishing should return in a few days.

That what I was thinking. I've never really experienced this phenomenon when trout fishing, so I wasn't sure. I'll probably head back out this weekend. I'd like to start exploring further downriver...