

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : Hoses in creeks

Re: Hoses in creeks

Author: : franklin

Date: : 2012/9/11 11:49:55

URL:

Quote:

salmonoid wrote:

Quote:

Swattie87 wrote:

I've seen hoses like that in two different streams. Both appeared to just be for drawing water. Ironically in both cases they were for small cabins on state forest land, although several counties apart. They didn't seem to really be doing any harm as the fishing was more or less the same both above and below the hoses. My guess is this happens quite a bit in the backwoods of PA. I'm pretty sure it's illegal to draw water like that, but I didn't report either case...can anyone verify that?

Your case may be very different however...neither of these cabins had a pool on their property!

Does anyone know what are the regs for withdrawing water from streams, particularly CWF rated streams? At least half a dozen times this year, I've passed a stream with a truck or van and trailer pulled along side it, with about six to eight plastic drums. There's a guy standing there, presumably filling the drums with water from the stream (or perhaps he's filling the stream with something from the drums?)..

From what I can find it appears you can withdraw up to 10,000 gal a day without a permit.