Well, we were there Monday to Friday. Monday was rough, 6 foot seas, and yes, it was due to hurricane Leslie. Tuesday through Thurs, though, were pretty calm. 1-3 foot seas. (which is still HUGE surf for a 9 month old, lol).

Just that the reports at the shops were that the surf sucked. When we were out there it didn't look like anybody else was catching anything. And unlike previous years, we kinda had a full time job in watching the baby when we were on the beach. Wherever you put him, he'd crawl full speed directly towards the water. Then you had to "save him" when a wave came in. But if you put him down, he'd aim directly towards the water again. He loves the water. Perhaps just like daddy.

Yeah, I was happy to get into the slabs. I didn't think it was bad fishing at all.
