What I love about this argument is the dual sides to it. The same people who blast people for spot burning unknown streams are the very same people who complain about:

1. huge crowds on the "famous" streams.
2. the ignorant bait/spin fishermen who haven't a clue about wild trout, where they live, how to protect them, etc.
3. the PFBC's propensity to cater to the above crowd because they are the majority rather than wild trout enthusiasts who are the minority.

To me, we SHOULD spot burn, not just one stream at a time, (as that concentrates pressure), but a lot of them (to spread it out). I'd love to just list all of the streams I've found to be very good and worthwhile to fish, describing each and the best way to access them.

But, some of those were shown to me by others, and I won't betray their trust. Plus, I'd only do it if everyone else did too, as I don't want to ONLY draw attention to "my" streams.
