I was there two weeks ago and while crossing that section of the trail that was posted I ran into who I thought might have been the landowner. I spoke with him briefly and he said he was a good friend of the owner and was just walking down to check on his land. He told me exactly what Govtmule said; The guy does not mind the fisherman or trail users crossing his property on the old railroad bed, he was upset about kids camping on his land and building fires and partying all night long.

I also noticed the adjacent land was posted for sale. The parcel just after crossing the bridge from the tunnel lot.
