+1 on the larger hook gap. I have done real well using Tiemco 2488's in small hook sizes. I also feel that a curved shank hook is stronger than a straight hook - less likely to bend on a decent fish. If you are fishing a hook with an offset point, try to set up for your drift so that the offset hook is pointing toward your position rather than away from you - I seriously think this improves your hook up percentage. I have tested many of these techniques fishing Tricos over the past few seasons. Good luck!
