

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : Fracking Spill into Pine Creek?

Re: Fracking Spill into Pine Creek?

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2012/9/28 15:30:44

URL:

Much of Eastern PA doesn't have gas lines. I know my house doesn't. That's unheard of in western PA, but it's the norm out here. Heating oil tanks are common. And freakin expensive. We run a heat pump with a PROPANE stove backup. Until I moved here, I'd never seen a heat pump nor heard of anyone using propane for anything other than their bbq grills.

But yeah, it's not like underground gas lines are a new thing with Marcellus. Including urban areas. The Marcellus wells are feeding the same lines the shallow gas wells did for decades. But since the range is a little different, there are areas where new lines need to be installed.