

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : Fracking Spill into Pine Creek?

Re: Fracking Spill into Pine Creek?

Author: : franklin

Date: : 2012/9/29 0:09:44

URL:

Quote:

JasonS wrote:

Quote:

MHanes wrote:

Franklin,

How the hell do you think you stay warm at night from you furnace. You think they can just call the gas fairy. Yeah its in pipes and they have been running though town and cities for years. Natural gas development is not a new thing They have drilling in PA for over a century.

Western PA has been keeping you Phili folk warm for years.

Maybe you need a nuclear powered sarcasm detector, obviously your gas powered one is broke. Although in your defense, there are so many lol worthy posts in the conservation forum, that it's easy to think Franklin was serious.

I don't think I hooked a trout that well this year. Yes, I'm well aware of the long history of natural gas in this country, used to have a house that was heated by gas. Quite familiar with the infrastructure to deliver it. No, I'm not concerned about running gas lines through the forests or the city. The main impact to our wild streams will be potential for additional silt during installation. In the scheme of things the impact will be for a short duration.