No passing off the buck here, I was just pointing out that "fracking companies" do not "grab land".

The E & P companies are the ones held responsible, and we accept that, when it is accurate information. But it gets old when non issues are reported as toxic spills, etc. I'll say it again, this industry, right now, has NEVER been safer or more environmentally friendly.

We all like the lights, heat, fuel to take us hunting and fishing. But no one wants it in their back yard. I have never had a hunting spot ruined by well drilling or pipelines, can't say the same for housing or retail development.

There is more "stuff" running off a mall parking lot than these well locations.
