Dear Dave,

I know I'm not a scientist or statistician but when I saw that the while the success ratio appeared to be low in the mid Susquehanna at least it appeared to have doubled each year from 2010 to 2012.

But when I looked at the incidence of disease I saw that it also seemed to double as represented by the graphs from 2011 to 2012 what inspiration I had initially vanished.

Like I said I'm not a statistician, but if spawning success doubles each year and disease levels double each year there will probably never be a net growth in the population, at best you will keep a steady level that is relatively sparse in numbers compared to 15 years ago.

Regards,

Tim Murphy 😞
