Don't get me wrong...I use that site all the time...There is just that line between the guy who wants a first hand account and one who paranoid that someone is going to take a buss of people to his "secret" stream. I talked to a guy at the Jam who said someone told him not to go to Spring because it would be muddy...it was in great shape...bad advice...he never spoke to anyone who was actually there...guy drove all the way from N.C. Ran into him on Spruce sunday...

frankly, CFS means nothing to me if I've never been there before...but I know what "high and muddy" and "low and clear" and "a little high and slightly off color" mean.

I see no harm in giving that description, what bugs they might have seen and how cold the water is...telling me you caught 85 fish means nothing...I've been on the same stream 2 days in a row (two hours in a row sometimes for that matter) with completely opposite results...but a short statement of the condition of the stream is always nice...
