Becker,

My buddies and I have noticed that when we used fluorocarbon tied to flies that sometimes there was knot failure. I do know how to tie a good many knots and tie them very well spit on em ect.

I love Maxima Chameleon and Ultragreen as well as Amnesia in butt sections. I also like ultragreen and Chameleon for tippetts too.

I also really like Drennan too, not easy to find. All Seasons Sports is the only place up there that carries it.

I am a big proponent of fluorocarbon for nymphs, streamers, soft hackles and wets. I use Seaguar Grandmax for that.

In saltwater its regular Seaguar hands down, if I run out Maxima works great too.

But for salmon steelhead I have lost faith in Seaguar Grandmax.. it is very brittle and does not have the breaking strength that Maxima does along with the abrasion resistance.

Maybe the reason that Maxima is the single largest line sold on the lakes.

Anyhow Becker we were discussing this while drinking some ice cold Troegs Troegansators, and the subject came up. We have each noticed trouble with fluorocarbon. We have fished the great lakes for long time together.

Sometimes we like to try new things like fluorocarbon and IMHO I'll take Maxima or Drennan over fluorocarbon for salmon and steelhead.
