

Subject: : Hatch and Entomology Forum

Topic: : Hatches and good flies for white clay creek

Re: Hatches and good flies for white clay creek

Author: : afishinado

Date: : 2012/10/25 6:58:46

URL:

Quote:

mpschrann wrote:

I've seen occasional baetis hatches while out there, but with most of the trout having been stocked only three weeks ago I don't know if they are keyed into any hatches in particular.

That being said when it comes to dry flies my best luck have been with attractor patterns, but I catch way more fish with streamers or nymphs. Just about any streamer (usually size 10-12) I've used on the stream seems to catch at least one or two smallmouth and a few trout. PT and Hare's ear nymphs are productive for trout, panfish and chubs. Seems kind of like a generic answer for most of the streams in SE Pa. I'm sure SJ worms and most midges would work on the recently stocked trout as well.

Great answer. There are no magic flies. Most times the generic / widely used flies will catch fish in most any stream, especially in recently stocked streams.