That's the one that ALWAYS works for me. Cast, forget it while lighting a cigarette or watching a bird or untangling something and land a fish. It almost makes me think I am trying too hard otherwise.

This always has a humbling effect on me. At times, I think I've developed some amount of skill as a fisherperson. Then, a fish goes and hooks itself 😊 Brookies are notorious for this, IMHO, because I think they are starving half the time.

To the OP question, as others have stated, there's really no wrong way to fish a bugger. It mimics many different things in the water, and fishing it multiple ways helps it mimic even more things..
