i sugest going cheap, i've bought some stuff off ebay from a guy named roger that hardware wise is great for the money. or like bikerfish says, take your time and let it all come together. and one piece of advise i can give you is take an old rod, cutt the guides off of it, and practice wrapping and epoxying the wrapping part is not that bad but the tip section is definitely the hardest(damn wiggly thing). and do the practice rod first for the epoxy, that can be tricky. take your time read, read, read! and it will all come together.

good luck man!
