I think this has pretty well been said, but the snook and tarpon have moved to the warmer water so you won't see them on the beach...they will move to the back bays though. I've never done too much mangrove stuff, but will probably go in a skiff the first time so I don't take a kayak or something into a gator pit...

You'll most likely be ok with clousers...which is the case for most salt fishing. This time of year especially since its mostly a trout and red thing. There will also be ladyfish and jacks around which will slam just about anything. You could also catch pompano which are in the surf during the winter...if thats the case, use small clousers (yellow is popular), like size 8 max, there mouth is the size of a nickel max.

I will be south Fl. all next week on the east coast around Jupiter. Shoot me a PM if you're in the area and want to fish.
