I've been thinking of getting a micrometer to do some measurements on it. Lines can be of varying thicknesses and the process to make them may differ, but the taper and weight of the line will help achieve the best results for the appropriate line weight. I haven't used an air cel line before, but I'll assume that it has a different technology to apply more air into it's lines for better floatation and thus more thickness to the line.

I will be offering a Premium line sometime next year to compare to some of the top end lines. The Alpha line that you have is more of an entry level line, just at a more reasonable price.
