Fingerling stockings have always seemed to me to be something that should be expanded, even if on an experimental basis. Truthfully, fingerling programs have had very mixed success in PA and aren't anything new. In some streams around here, like the lower Letort, they did very well. In other local creeks, like Big Spring and Yellow Breeches.....they failed. Nevertheless, they're worth trying.

I checked on the fingerlings in Green Spring last week. They're still there after several weeks, although the herons have been on 'em. I'll check from time to time over the winter - will be interesting to see if a decent number will hold over.
