Being a voracious reader of fishing books, I can honestly say that there are only two trout fishing related books which I could not read through the first chapter. This is one of them. The other was called: "The River Why," by someone I cannot recall. I put them down for different reasons however. "The River Why" taught me that I don't much care for trout fishing fiction, unless it is a tale spun by Traver or Geirach, though these two claim to be non-fiction writers. By the time I was mostly through Chapter One of "Midlife Crisis" I realized that I did not care much for the writer. His writing style reflected his persona I fear; too much adolescent-level self-indulgence.
