

Subject: : Fly Fishing Locations

Topic: : The Smokies

Re: The Smokies

Author: : klingy

Date: : 2012/12/1 13:05:44

URL:

Sasquatch,

Cataloochee camp ground is a great place for a base camp for at least a couple days of your trip. Quite a few streams within hiking distance. It's the most remote and quiet of the national park campgrounds. Sits back a ten mile winding gravel road that leads you to a beautiful old valley full of history. There are elk in the area, and the cataloochee creek and little cataloochee (full of wild bows) run pretty much right through the place. Set off hiking in any direction and you realize that you are in the middle of NOWHERE (which is a good thing). I was really surprised how many fish were in the streams even right near the campground. Good luck with your plans, there are soooo many options down there. Raven fork is another area to check out. Hike way in, and you'll feel like you're 500 years back in time.