geebee,

I guess I agree with your logic, that any stocked rainbow could become a steelhead if it is stocked in a stream that is connected to a "sea" or great lake in the case of the erie tribs. Spruce Creek is not connected to such a body of water. It is connected to the little J on the bottom and I am not certain of its exact source, but I am sure the head waters are limestone seeps with possibly some small freestone feeders.

In other words you need to be connected to a large body of water to have "Anadromous" fish, which is what steelhead are. Genetically the same as rainbows, but a fish that runs from a lake or ocean into a stream.
