The fact that the state is attempting to claim royalties on these streambeds based upon them being "public land" says a lot. Again, not that I'm willing to try it, but I'd have a hard time swallowing the state's judicial system telling me I'm trespassing while fishing within the same high water mark where they're collecting royalties based on a public land declaration...assuming they are able to do so.

"Fish In" - Hah, that's great. I think I could pretty accurately predict where the first "fish in" would take place...not just the stream, but the specific section of stream flowing along a specific piece of property...
