

Subject: : Tips and Tricks

Topic: : Swinging for Pennsylvania Steelhead.

Re: Swinging for Pennsylvania Steelhead.

Author: : PennypackFlyer

Date: : 2012/12/13 16:15:47

URL:

Quote:

PennKev wrote:

Like a deer hair or rabbit fur mouse? Nah. Waste of time. You need something that'll sink easily.
(Top-water actiom is wishful thinking BTW)

Take a look at intruder style flies. I've had a lot of luck with them in various color combos. Rabbit strip flies work well too. Wooly buggers are not a bad option as well and you've probably already got some.

Kev

Ok, thought I'd ask about the mouse one..love to see a trout or bass kill a top water. I do have some wooly buggers, and I definately use them.

You also mentioned something that sinks easily. I have this big nymph that has rubber legs to it, beaded brass head. Not sure what it's called or where I picked it up at. Heavy as they get it is. Best to use with my 10W rod. I have also been practicing with some small rubber bass lures (wiggly things and crawlers). I have caught trout on them - but not with any real consistancy. I think partly because of location.

Any suggestions are colors to use?