I've tried almost everything to avoid the cold numb feet, wicking layer, polar fleece, wool, etc...no success.

I'm thinking of buying these: <http://www.backcountry.com/lorpen-trekking-expedition-sock>

But before I spend all that $, I'd like to know if anyone on here has tried them? They look promising....rather expensive, but if they work, I wouldn't mind...

As you know in flyfishing there is a lot of standing around. That's where the difficulty in deciding comes in because the sock are for hiking. I have not tried those type of socks...$70.00 seams a bit expensive. I was just online with Cabalas regarding this area.

Anyone try the Cabalas wader knee to toe socks? It looks like they have great reveiws.
