Good article Shane - thanks for the heads-up.

I too agree that, as an impartial observer, this is a tough, ethical dilemma. I'm not sure about the anti-drilling angle, although it's plausible. I can say, back in the 1990s, there was a good bit of new research on the negative impacts of trout hatchery effluent and this along with just generally newer attitudes about environmental protection have cast a shadow over coop trout hatcheries in PA. DEP is to be commended (of course) for striving to uphold the protection laws applicable to newly designated HQCF streams. Personally, just speaking for myself, I'd favor some sort of compromise in this case that would enable them to jump start the hatchery. How far would the pipe to the Po have to run?
