

Subject: : Fly Tying

Topic: : Storing Fly tying Material

Storing Fly tying Material

Author: : Fly5

Date: : 2012/12/28 21:13:09

URL:

Hello, I am new to this forum as well as fly fishing in general. I recently inherited a large amount of fly tying material. It was stored in containers with moth balls, I am somewhat aware of the issues with the moth balls. These materials were stored for about five years or so, should I proceed with caution in handling this material. Is there an alternative to the moth balls and what is the best way to store any material going forward? I am interested in learning about fly tying as well, so I would like to store this material properly. Any advice will be greatly appreciated. Thanks.