L-soult,

What you've got here appears to be a collection of generic dry flies and wet flies that were either somewhat poorly tied or that have been compressed in storage and have lost much of their original shape (or a bit of both). It's worth remembering that not all flies can be identified by name and are best considered by group rather than exact pattern. It appears that some of the flies, probably #s 1,6 & 10 are traditional feather wing wet flies. The others are a tougher call but they look like dry flies or ones that could be fished as traditional wets.
