After teaching two grandsons to fish there may be no tired and true method but since your son is a little older I would get him just casting in the back yard this winter.{ You may have already done this}

But I told my grandsons not to worry about how much line they were getting out. I think 20 feet was tops and my one grandson started when he was 5 with a length of line maybe 20 feet long tied to the butt of the rod and I got him casting to different spots in the yard. That translated to the pond for blue gills much easier than the first grandson. Your child being older it will have to be to the reel i am sure!

It is easy for 8-10 year old kids to get a length of line out 20 feet and feel comfortable giving it a flick from front to back to front again, think about it isn't that what we do on most small streams anyway!

Good luck and have fun.
